

Covering Your Police – and Your Military at Home and at War

Gallup says the military is America's most respected institution. The police rank third. Experts show how to create compelling coverage.

Friday, Oct. 1

9-10:30 a.m. | BC 127, BC 129, LB 121

Start the day networking with broadcast news professionals who explain Everything Students Should Know About the Business.

11-11:50 a.m. | BC 129

- Mark Greenblatt, investigative reporter at KHOU-TV, Houston, won a Peabody this year for exposing financial corruption and sexual discrimination at the top of the Texas National Guard.
- Russ McQuaid, investigative reporter at WXIN-TV, Indianapolis, has probed apparent misdeeds by high-ranking police and other public officials – and once performed radio comedy with Tim Allen.

Noon-1:50 | BC 129 (includes free lunch, sponsored by Indiana AP Broadcasters)

- Lindsay Allen, reporter and anchor at WDRB-TV, Louisville, embedded this summer with the Kentucky National Guard at war in Afghanistan.
- Ball State Professor James M. Nyce, also a visiting professor at the Swedish National Defence College, studies how insurgents quickly and cheaply adapt to the expensive high-tech weapons that the U.S. and its allies are using against them.